

From: Nondisclosure007 <nondisclosure007@gmail.com>
Sent: Wednesday, January 20, 2010 3:35 PM
To: secretary <secretary@CFTC.gov>
Subject: Regulation of Retail Forex

Dear Sir/Madaam,

The new rules that are being proposed will hurt the "little guy" trying to get a foot into the Forex trading arena. I would hope that the CFTC's goal would be to 'enable' more people to trade in this fascinating market. Quite frankly, I think leverage is the only thing that has kept those of us 'little' guys in the market. W/out it, we would trade bonds or stocks or other commodities.

Please re-consider this rule change and leave the leverage spots alone. If it is your belief that the leverage is too high for the reason that people are losing, then education is the answer. Proper education would go a greater distance to helping the problem; less leverage just discourages people from getting involved in Forex.

Thank You.
-Michael

RIN 3038-AC61