---

Greetings,

I am a foreign Forex player, which chose USA as main country where to deposit my funds for doing actual live trading. I've been notified by my brokerage firm, that new CFTC regulation will nerf actual margin requirements. I think that given the fact that money isn't really "material", almost everyone will pass on to European Brokers, like UK ones, which are also very professional by fame.

I suggest you to not certify those new regulation. Would be detrimental just for your country, as big players will be encouraged to move their assets overseas, and maybe create subsidiary bank accounts to avoid paying taxes in the US...

Don't have time to waste anymore on the topic, because if that will happen I'll move my money, as almost every small/medium player will do.

Sincerely,

MB
