Subject: Regulstion of Retail Forex

Re: RIN 3038-AC61

I am at a time in my life when physically I am unable to join the outside work force, if there were jobs to be had there. I am, however, able to trade on the Forex in my home to supplement my income. I certainly can approve of regulations which would help retail traders as myself avoid scams and fraud which would endanger our funds. I cannot look favorably at regulations that would set maximum leverage for U.S. retail traders at 10:1. That would restrict my freedom to trade as I wish. Protect me from fraud, if you wish, but do not take away my freedom to trade in the U.S. As much as I would dislike doing so, I, and many other Americans I suspect, would be forced to move our monies to other countries to preserve our trading freedom. It is incomprehensible to me that my country would take away some of my freedoms in stead of preserving them. Please do not let this happen to me and other retail Forex traders.

Sincerely,

Sandra Wehrley
