

From: Jourdan Rothschild <jourdanr@gmail.com>
Sent: Friday, January 22, 2010 2:37 PM
To: secretary <secretary@CFTC.gov>
Subject: Upcoming Proposed Regulation concerning Retail Forex Trading

I am not for this, you are now going to make the average trade put more into his account to trade.

I personally do not have $10K to realistically trade when previously had to put only $1000.00. Your excerpt below in my opinion is downright ridiculous. Seems like this would limit or remove the average working person from participating in one of the real American dreams of being a Forex trader. I am not happy with the chance that I will have to cancel my account with an American based broker and go outside the US to trade, if this passes it will leave me no choice but to move my trading account overseas. Does not seem to be American like but the government is continually placing restrictions and regulations on the past time opportunities that are really making it hard for the American trader to profit in this large vast of monies available to him or her, and when you finally get it down to a working science then another restriction is implemented.

I request that this not be passed and removed from the table altogether

As many of you are aware, the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission (CFTC) announced on January 13, 2010 that it is seeking public comment on proposed regulations concerning retail Forex trading. As part of the proposed regulations, it is stated: "leverage in retail Forex customer accounts would be subject to a 10-to-1 limitation," which means 10:1 leverage would be the maximum amount allowed for all Forex traders in the U.S.

Jourdan Rothschild
jourdanr@gmail.com
217-899-1410