

From: Alfred McCorrie <alf7bre3nd@tiscali.co.uk>
Sent: Saturday, January 23, 2010 2:28 AM
To: secretary <secretary@CFTC.gov>
Subject: Re: Proposed New CFTC Rule on Forex Margin

---

Dear Sir/Madam

I view with consternation the proposed new rule on limiting forex margin to 10:1. This will have a devastating effect on my trading. It will effectively stop me trading at all.

Sir/Madam I do not need this kind of dubious protection.

Suppose it was thought necessary to put up crash barriers along the side of every road, street, or sidewalk, in order to stop jaywalkers of any description, wandering on to the road. Would you see any need for this kind of action?

In any situation in the present world situation there is a need for the individual to 'grow up' and accustom themselves to the prevailing risks, so far as they are able, or course.

Preventing the small amount of risk the individual can't cope with, or may be perceived to be unable so to cope, may be totally outside the realms of the acceptable.

I respectfully compare the proposed rule on margin to be in the same category as the above.

I therefore would like to suggest to the CFTC that they might reconsider this rule, and see the need to not apply it.

Yours very respectfully

Alfred McCorrie