

From: Greg Campbell <greg@track29.net>
Sent: Thursday, February 4, 2010 9:49 AM
To: secretary <secretary@CFTC.gov>
Subject: Proposed Forex Leverage

To Whom It May Concern,

The proposed amendment to the current law regarding leverage on forex accounts would put me, a casual investor, out of business. I have been responsible with my finances all my life, own outright two homes, have never been bankrupt, have no credit card debt, and so on. I have set aside a small amount to 'dabble' in the spot forex market. If I lose that, I will not reinvest more funds. The point is that I don't need someone else to mitigate my losses. Currently I am with MB Trading, a very responsible broker. Their leverage is 100:1 which allows me to trade small amounts without a huge investment. Should the requirements go to 10:1, I would either have to quit, or invest a greater amount. If your intention is to help me mitigate my losses, setting up a situation which would require me to invest more into my account would be counter productive. I respectfully request that you drop the change requiring a 10:1 requirement and leave leverage as it is.

Thank you,

Greg Campbell