Subject: 'Regulation of Retail Forex'

RIN3038-AC61

It is my understanding that you are considering limiting the leverage on retail forex trading accounts. Have you considered what this will do to those independent traders who derive their income from trading forex? If a trader is currently make $150,000 per year, that income will be cut to $15,000 per year unless he is willing to deposit ten times his current balance.

I understand that the current financial crisis has resulted in a call for greater regulation of the financial markets, but those regulations should not be so extreme as to virtually eliminate a market from retail traders.
