Subject: 'Regulation of Retail Forex'

To whom it may concern:

RIN 3038-AC61

I have been trading forex for nearly 2 years after losing my job during the economic disaster in this country. I have been able to pay my mortgage and feed my family because I learned how to trade forex. I took a hit after the last leverage adjustment. Please take into consideration the impact this new regulation you are considering will have on retail forex traders. I think it to be a civil rights issue if the leverage is changed again and takes the retail forex trader out of business. Enough is enough. I personally will be out of business among many, many other responsible retail forex traders. How am I going to make a living? Take into consideration those of us who are responsible traders and do not cry and place blame on the brokers when we have a loss. Please take into consideration civil rights of the American retail forex traders. When will it be enough for you?

Sincerely,

Brandi Lynch
