Subject: Regulation of Retail Forex

Hi!

This is Yahia, I am one of the forex traders with FXDD. Identification Number: RIN 3038-AC61.

I would like to express my opinion about the new so-called regulations... First of all, it would be so silly to call these childish ideas 'Regulations' with all the respect to the committee, as it serves certain clan of traders by sucking more blood (more money to open small lots) out of small traders... it's true that trading on leverage is more risky than trading your own money.. however, Forex is already a risky business and the Win-Loss ratio in the markets are already pre-determined by nature of the markets...so any person or trader who enters the market is already in risk all the time..highly-leveraged trading or trading your own money still no big difference on the nature of the markets itself; disciplined traders would always make money from the losses of less-disciplined greedy non-experienced traders..So no need at all to put more rules and regulations to suffocate traders' freedom or someday you wouldn't even find a trader willing to invest in US brokerage houses or markets during insufficient room for ambitions and probably they will head to european markets.the 100:1, FIFO and

No-hedging garbage is already nonsense and returned with no benefits but the flee of many traders outta US markets.

PIZ leave us alone, the markets are already enough burden and no need for more interest-oriented rules!

if you think that this will limit the chances of success of small traders to win in the markets and become millionaires one day or cause in the losses of the untouchable -elite- illuminati- secret clan of traders or big instutional garabge, then you're far too wrong.

Although small traders lose most of the time, many of them never give up and some of them will always make it, and the rest of them may cause in some losses to Big Sharks.

Small traders also represents big portion of liquidity to big traders, so if kept suffocating them..they will flee away and the results would be loss-loss situation for both the big sharks and the small fish.. In the end, I am demanding to stop the trail of garabge, trashy interest-oriented theories from poisoning more small fish (traders) or someday the Sea Of Trading will be short on Fish and Big Sharks will Die of either Hunger or killing each others for Food!!!
