Subject: Regulation of Retail Forex

RIN 3038-AC61

To whom it may concern:

I wonder where, when and, how it will all end... The proposed CFTC rule, a possible leverage change 10:1; The great think about been an cogitative adult is the understanding of what your risk appetite is. The option to select the leverage that is best suited for myself (and I am sure many, if not all others) should be a personally decide as I (we) comprehend what forex is, and is therefore, willing to take on that risk.

For many of us it is a way to put food on our tables and provide shelter to sleep at night for our families, a burden the US government cannot further assist in, because your system is already stretched.

I will ask again, where, when and how it (regulating) will end? I (we) are traders who are doing something that will not make us a burden to your governmental institute, but yet, it seems to me, that you do not even want well intend individuals to put ourselves, in a position to potentially earn a living especially in these challenging times where are no jobs and unemployment is high with no real (long term) way of fixing it.

IBFX, GFT, FX solution and all the others, have given us a vehicle to possible earn an honest living, once again I(we) understand the risk of forex and in no way are we delusional; but that's, the entrepreneurial mind and spirit that makes us successful and hopefully will continue to make America great. The option to select our leverage of choice here in the USA, is a continued part of why entrepreneurs are willing to take on the knowing risk of FOREX, and why, I (we) are speaking out against the new proposed change. IT WILL HAVE A NEGATIVE IMPACT.

Sincerely,
nathalee hayden.
