Subject: Position Limits

I am writing to voice my opinion regarding "position limits." I believe as long as the United States is dependent on foreign oil, it is imperative investing and hedging in energy be largely limited to end users. The cost to the American public as well as the financial empowerment of billions of dollars to Middle Eastern countries far outweighs the free market profiteers that have proven they will eagerly throw this country under the bus to make a buck. There were a number of lessons which led to legislation after the Great Depression, including the uptick rule, Glass-Steagall, and position limits. All of which I believe have contributed to this country's, and ultimately the world's, current financial crisis. I applaud the efforts of the current CFTC to review position limits.....born of the Great Depression, and every bit as credible today as it was in 1936!
