Dear CFTC Comments:

Any casino whose owners hope to stay in business and thus "in the game" must have rules and some kind of mechanism to keep the odds somewhere close to fair. Wall Street has been run like a rigged roulette wheel for years with the results that we see all around us. Without a perception of fairness that bears some relationship to reality winning back the trust of the average investor is going to be a tough sell.

I don't think you really should have to hear this from me, it should be obvious to anyone. I think the problem is the people who have been running the game both in the government and the Wall Street casino.

Sincerely,
